GREEN & SOCIAL INFRASTRUCTURE

- 10 The Rise of Wood Changes to some provincial building codes are opening up more interest in mid-rise construction using wood materials. By Don Proctor
- 14 A Boost for Communities How the 2016 federal budget is helping communities climb out of their social infrastructure deficits. By Eve Krakow
- 26 The Urban Forest Trees provide valuable services to communities, but climate change and other factors are killing the canopy that covers Canada's largest metropolitan region. By Grace Martin, Michelle Sawka and Steven W. Peck

FINANCE & TRANSPORTATION

- 16 Smart Deals The idea of public-public partnerships are relatively new when it comes to infrastructure spending in Canada, but one provincial pension fund sees it as a way to support projects at home while boosting the bottom line. By James Careless
- 18 The Key to Gridlock When looking at how to build transit infrastructure, sometimes it's best to search for examples abroad—both the good and the bad. By Glenn Miller

PLANNING

- 20 The Big Picture Planning public transit in large urban regions is a complex and difficult job, one that requires holistic thinking. For long-term success, it should also avoid decisions based on single issues, even if politically expedient. By Saul Chernos
- 24 Raising the Bar If developers hope to gain social license for the municipal projects they propose, then responding to community feedback and exceeding minimum standards is a good first start. By Pouyan Safapour
- 28 Water Wish List A construction association for Ontario's water and wastewater industry argues the province needs a regulatory body to better coordinate water infrastructure projects in the years ahead. By Jeff Sanford

ENGAGEMENT, PERFORMANCE & LEADERSHIP

- 30 Citizen Budget A new online tool helps municipalities do a better job of engaging with the public, and helping citizens understand real-world budget constraints and tradeoffs. By Joel Ornoy
- 32 Moneyball Using performance data to assist with decision-making worked for the Oakland Athletics baseball club, so why aren't more governments using the approach? By Robyn Gray
- 34 Wonder Women The Women's Infrastructure Network honoured three women in April for being exceptional leaders and mentors. By Eve Krakow
